

AXS-LAB 2012 FORUM

NOVEMBER 23 2012

ACA Australia is a national membership-based professional association for people working to achieve accessibility of the built environment for people with a disability. It is the peak national body for access consultancy in Australia and a major partner in advancing equity of built environmental accessibility for people with a disability.

AXS-LAB is a forum, conducted by ACAA, which seeks to inform and educate building professionals about access for people with disabilities to the built environment. AXS-LAB brings together building design professionals including access consultants, architects, interior designers, landscape architects, building certifiers, planners, building practitioners, graphic designers and others with a genuine interest in universal design to share experiences and to improve knowledge.

This year, at AXS-LAB 2012, we have a sensational line up of expert speakers who will present to the forum on subjects relating to disability access, human rights and building law.

AXS-LAB 2012 will also showcase some recently completed projects and achievements in Queensland and provide attendees with an opportunity to hear how some Queensland access professionals are influencing the delivery of accessible environments in the area of public buildings, housing and transport.

AXS-LAB 2012 includes a trade exhibition where delegates will be able to review the latest product offerings from some of Australia's leading manufacturers and suppliers of products used to make the built environment more accessible.

AXS-LAB 2012 will provide ACAA members with 4 CPD points.
